ABOUT AMARC ASIA-PACIFIC

AMARC Asia-Pacific is the regional autonomous chapter of the World Association of Community Radio Broadcasters (AMARC International). It is constituted by the members of AMARC from countries in the Asia-Pacific region. It has a sub-regional governance structure that consists of South Asia, South East Asia, the Pacific, and East Asia.

AMARC Asia-Pacific aims to promote social justice and sustainable, democratic and participatory human development.

In pursuit of its goals, AMARC's purpose is to amplify the voices of the excluded and marginalized through community media and new ICTs, to support popular access to communications, and to defend and promote the development of community radio.

The AMARC Asia-Pacific regional office, based in Kathmandu, Nepal, works closely with its members and partner organizations across the Asia-Pacific region and internationally, to implement activities aimed at promoting freedom of expression, supporting community development and development of resilient communities.

INTRODUCTION

Community radios, in the Asia Pacific region, are a crucial medium for giving voice to diverse communities, promoting cultural expression, and social development. From bustling cities to rural villages, community radio stations bring people together, provide a platform for underrepresented voices, and empower communities to share news, music, and traditions. Community radios in this region often tackle everything, from environmental issues to youth programs, from the rights of the indigenous communities to grassroots health initiatives, and more.

In a region where mainstream media may not reach isolated areas, where Indigenous and minority voices may lack representation, community radios play a vital role. They offer locally relevant content and are accessible to communities that might have limited internet access or resources.

The AMARC Asia-Pacific Regional Office is pleased to present an updated version of the Asia-Pacific Community Radio Directory that was first published in 2009. We are very thankful to everyone who cooperated with us and sent us their entries. This directory is a work in progress and we hope to continuously build upon it with more entries from across the region in the coming years. We would also like to request our readers to kindly inform us about other community radios in the Asia-Pacific region that are not listed in this directory as well as of any discrepancy among the listed ones.

This directory will be a guide to an incredible network of community radio stations across the Asia Pacific region. Explore the vibrant world of community radio and connect with voices that celebrate diversity, champion local culture, and make a difference – one broadcast at a time.

METHODOLOGY

In the directory, we have categorized the community radio stations by country, highlighting the type of broadcasting, broadcasting language, target listeners, and areas of focus, making it easy to find stations that may align with the reader's interests.

The directory is primarily based on information collected through two methods. An online survey was sent to the community radios in the Asia-Pacific region. The survey sought to collect general information regarding the location of the radio, contact details of the head of the station, type of community radio, hours of broadcast, year of establishment, type of broadcast, and transmission power of the radio. The survey also included questions about the thematic focus of the radio, broadcasting languages, estimated number of listeners and coverage population, target listeners, and their presence in social media. An additional method for acquiring information for this publication was through secondary data collection in the form of desk-based research (of online sources), which helped to gather general information about the countries.

It is to be noted that the directory includes radio stations run by educational institutes (e.g. Campus radio) and government-affiliated institutions (e.g. Krishi Vigyan Kendra, India) that are stated as community radios by the respective governments. All information provided in this directory have been provided by the respected radio stations.

We are aware that the number of community radios in the Asia-Pacific region exceeds the number of entries in the directory by far.

The remoteness of the broadcasters and in many cases the change of addresses hindered us from reaching out. However, we will continue to go further and cover a higher number of community broadcasters in future editions.

Lastly, I wish to thank Utsab Khadka for diligently carrying out the research and putting together the directory. Robert Bichler has worked hard on the presentation, which adds to the value of the directory hugely and must be thanked too. He was ably supported by Simran Khanal. I would also like to thank the rest of the AMARC Asia-Pacific team consisting of Sagun Raj Lama, Rajesh Ramtel, Janu Bhandari, Gopi Chandra Pandey, and Amir Khakurel for their support.
